

Figure 1: Continuum of Climate Resilience Action. This heuristic demonstrates a progression of climate resilience activities at an organizational level. On the left are easier, more modest activity types that generally begin with the dissemination of information (e.g., one-way information flow). As one moves further to the right, the types of membership education and engagement activities become more advanced, ending on the far right with the development of professional standards of practice related to climate resilience. This heuristic is inherently iterative meaning that organizations may be working at multiple points in the continuum simultaneously and may continually move in and out of action categories over time.
